About this resource

PiF’s Learning Disabilities Resource List collates research, guidance, best practice and further contact details. It is intended to support the development of high quality patient information for people with learning disabilities. Please note, the websites referenced in this resource we last accessed by PiF in October 2013. If you have any feedback about the resource please contact admin@pifonline.org.uk.

About the author

Sian Finn has worked for 30 years in the NHS in roles such as health promotion specialist, clinical governance manager and self care programmes manager. She has a nursing and information background and has always been passionate about promoting patient empowerment through supporting self-management, patient information and shared decision making.

Sian is currently taking some time out of the formal working environment to explore new career options and learning opportunities. Her main interests at present are exploring the potential of social media in relation to promoting the patient empowerment agenda (@SianFinn), participating in a number of MOOCs with Coursera and Future Learn, and volunteering at the Stroke Association’s Life after Stroke Centre.

About Patient Information Forum

The Patient Information Forum (PiF) is the organisation for people working in consumer health information and support. PiF campaigns to ensure consumer health information is central to high-quality, patient-centred care. We help providers develop high quality information and support for their patients and the public. To find out more about our work and join our organisation visit www.pifonline.org.uk.
